WATSON:

Excuse me, Mister...?

SHERLOCK:

Shh!

WATSON:

My name is Joan Watson.

I've been hired by your father to be your sober companion.

He told me he was going to e-mail you about me.

I'm here to make the transition from your rehab experience to the routine of your everyday life as smooth as possible, so I will be living with you for the next six weeks, which means I'll be available to you 24/7.

SHERLOCK:

Do you believe in love at first sight?

WATSON:

Um...

SHERLOCK:

I know what you're thinking:

the world is a cynical place, and I must be a cynical man,

thinking a woman like you would fall for a line like that.

(the)Thing is...it isn't a line, so please hear me when I say this:

I have never loved anyone, as I do you,

right now...in this moment.

(Man on TV):

Do you believe in love at first sight?

I know what you're thinking:

the world is a cynical place, and I must be a cynical man,

thinking a woman like you would fall for a line like that.

(the)Thing is...it isn't a line, so please hear me when I say this:

I have never loved anyone, as I do you,

right now...in this moment.

SHERLOCK:

Spot on.

Sherlock Holmes.

Please don't get comfortable.

We won't be here long.

WATSON:

Mr. Holmes, did your father tell you about me or not?

SHERLOCK:

Uh, he e-mailed, said to expect some sort of addict-sitter.

WATSON:

Well, then he explained his conditions with respect to your sobriety?

SHERLOCK:

Well, if you mean his threats to evict me from this, the shoddiest and the least renovated of the five - count them - five properties he owns in New York, then yeah, he made his conditions quite clear:

(if) I use, I wind up on the street.

(if) I refuse your, quote-unquote, "help,"

I wind up on the street.

It's my understanding that most sober companions are recovering addicts themselves, but you've never had a problem with drugs or alcohol.

WATSON:

Your father told you.

SHERLOCK:

Of course he didn't.

WATSON:

Uh, would you care to explain why you broke out of your rehab facility the same day you were being released?

SHERLOCK:

Bored.

WATSON:

You were bored?

SHERLOCK:

No, I am bored right now.

It happens often;

you'll get used to it.
